Next up: No. 5 You will always have trade. We know that. You see it, you hear about it, everyone has their opinion on it. But never in your wildest dreams will you hear of teams trading away their two first-round picks in the same year. It just happens to be the league-wide trend, and the focus of the NBA this season. It's going to happen this year. When it does, teams will be giving away two high picks at a time, with more than a few teams holding on to multiple picks. With the draft still almost a month away, we have some idea of who might move into the mix, but with the draft just a couple weeks away, we're reaching out to other experts. Kentucky's John Calipari is a great agent for players, so we asked him who he thinks might be the best fit in a deal. "I think that's a good question," Calipari said. "I don't think there's any time that I think that there wouldn't be value in a deal, but I will tell you that players that I think there's an obvious 'Why wouldn't it happen? I think that list is everywhere. There's no way you're going to say it's not there. These are players that are going to go up against each other on the court and win championships. That's why I think it's going to be very difficult for all of those teams that think they might move one of those players into a draft slot. "It could be a situation where certain teams think they might move one of those players and they think they can get a return on him that might be better for their team, than
